Dear Jeannette

Here is the update on the next Palliative Pupus.

Please join interdisciplinary colleagues from across the state for another opportunity to network, learn together, and gain a greater sense of all our community has to offer in the care of the seriously ill.

In this session, using our case-based format, we hear how the palliative care program at Kaiser has learned to turn withdrawal of life support into a family-centered ceremony of remembrance. Please feel free to bring a friend and perhaps a pupu to share.

Kupuna Pono

At a recent Kōkua Mau meeting, we had a presentation by Tracey Wiltgen on Kupuna Pono. Tracey reported that many of the family conflicts they mediate involve health issues and the conversations are similar to those we see in hospice and palliative care. We see opportunities for collaboration as we both seek to prevent crisis and relieve stress.

Tracey Wiltgen sent this description of their program: Conflict is a fact of life. When families are faced with the challenges of caring for an aging family member, conflicts often become more emotional and escalate. To assist families engage in difficult conversations and prevent or resolve conflicts that arise around the care of the elder member, the Mediation Center of the Pacific created the Kupuna Pono Program. Through family conferences and mediation, families are able to talk through the sensitive issues with the assistance of impartial facilitators and mediators who then help the families create custom plans that meet the unique needs of the elder person and the other family members. To learn more about Kupuna

Pono, call the Mediation Center at 521-6767
